

I wish to go to...

If I could travel anywhere in the world it would be Tokyo, Japan, because the culture is different from the United States, and the food is weird but I'd like to try it. The food I would really love to try is octopus and sushi, because sushi I would try again, and I never tried octopus, but it's tricky to cook with that, I heard from the show called "The Worst Cooks of America." Also the clothes and anime in Japanese make it look like it's pretty awesome to live there. The money is different from the U.S. because the money is so fun to say, it's called yen. It looks like this:

Scituate

Scituate is the town that I grew up in and a beach town that includes Minot, Egypt and Peggotty beach. I come home every weekend from South Station in Boston and get picked up by a parent at the Greenbush stop in Scituate. An early name of Scituate was Satuit, which took the meaning of "Cold Brook." It referred to a small stream flowing into the harbor. There were different ways that it was spelled including Sityate, Cituate, Seteat, etc. At about 1640 the present form of the name was added. Some surrounding towns include Cohasset, Hingham and Duxbury. No one knows why a silent "C" was added. At about that time it was common to add a silent "C" to words. I think that it is a very bright and sunny town.

There are nice beaches and it is a nice community. It is very pretty and there are a lot of nice people. It is a very supportive place and a lot of people like going there but a lot of people are very alike. It would be cooler if it was a more diverse place. I remember being a kid in Scituate and liking the view of the town but couldn't as much connect to the kids there. As an adult I'm not sure if I quite want to go back there or maybe want to live somewhere with all types of different people later in my life.

A few cool things to check out when going there are Maria's Sub Shop, Barker Tavern and Satuit Tavern. Some great places to visit in Scituate are the Scituate Lighthouse, Lawson Tower and any of the beaches which are Minot, Egypt and Peggotty beach. Also if you like golf be sure to visit Widow's Walk. Its accessible with train, car and there is the water so you can go by boat.

AWESOME
